

Lantmännen's graduate trainee program popular with students

Lantmännen's Graduate Trainee Program has once again been named one of Sweden's most attractive trainee programs. In Karriärföretagen's student poll, Lantmännen ranked second among social science students and third among BSc engineering students.

The Graduate Trainee Program is designed to give new graduates a broad start through rotations across different parts of the business and a structured training setup.

"Our Graduate Trainee Program gives participants a clear entry point into Lantmännen and a unique opportunity to build networks early, gain experience, and develop a holistic understanding of our operations," says Carina Eriksson, Head of Learning & Talent Development at Lantmännen.

"Being ranked highly in several categories is a strong indication that students see our trainee program as relevant and developing for the skills that will be needed in the years ahead," says Linda Siljemark, Employer Branding Manager at Lantmännen.

Facts and more information

Categories and timing: Through its own and other student networks, Karriärföretagen conducted a poll during December 2025–January 2026 to identify the 10 most attractive trainee programs in six categories: economists, IT, social sciences, real estate agents, MSc engineering students, and BSc engineering students.

Participants: A total of 2,489 students took part across the six categories.

Selection: Respondents selected three employers with trainee programs they considered most attractive from all trainee programs published by designated Career Companies on Karriärföretagen's website. Students chose from about 115 employers with trainee programs listed there.

About Karriärföretagen's student network: The network includes about 30,000 people who regularly use Karriärföretagen to find information about future employers.
